This the classic text on how to build successful partnerships between museums and schools. An Alliance of Spirit:

Museum and School Partnerships, edited by Kim Fortney and Beverly Sheppard, brings together the latest thinking and instructive case studies on how museums and schools can better understand each other's goals as they work together to provide school children the most inspiring educational experience possible inside the museum. Includes special Putting It Into Practice sections of practical advice for teachers and museum educators. Published in cooperation with EdCom, the Educator's Committee of the American Association of Museums.

Kim Fortney, Bev Sheppard and other outstanding museum educators shed light on the reasons why museums, places of free-choice learning, work so hard to engage with the formal K-12 standards. This and other questions of enormous interest to novice and seasoned practitioners alike are answered here. At the center of things, for educators in both schools and museums, are inquiry, social interaction, the power of observation, and always the kids. --Mary Case, Founding Director, Qm2An Alliance of Spirit is an excellent updating of museum-school collaborations that includes specific examples of success, practical tips, and above all, a poignant reminder why our work with children is so important. --Ted Lind, Deputy Director for Education, The Newark Museum A team of authors from both sides of the desk revisits and updates a classic text on museum-school collaboration, emphasizing theory- and research-based recommendations for 21st-century practice. --Carol B.
