Mary B. Fecko, Mary Beth Weber : Cataloging Nonbook Resources (How-To-Do-It Manuals for Librarians) before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Cataloging Nonbook Resources (How-To-Do-It Manuals for Librarians):

Non-book materials are an ever-larger part of every library's collection. This hands-on manual is a concise guide to the cataloging and classification of those materials. Each chapter discusses one material type and focuses on the different formats in which that material is available. Chapters provide examples, illustrations and rule interpretations from AACR2R. Material types include visual materials, sound recordings, computer files, electronic resources and kits.

From Scientific American...a powerful learning tool
From The New Yorker...help[s] both the novice and experienced cataloger facing a specific form of nonbook material for the first time...teaches through numerous examples and simple, straightforward instruction...powerful learning tool...would lend itself well to a classroom or technical services department...
...Libraries that routinely catalog nonbook items will want to purchase this...those who only rarely catalog material will find it invaluable. -- Library Software
