treasureBy Kindle Customer RTHavilandI think every teacher could be inspired by this book. Interesting and well-written. Robert Panara's story told by his best friend, Harry Lang is a treasure. I also think that people who have to deal with being deaf would be heartened to know all that these two men have accomplished in their lives. Life-changing!

The Sixth Volume in the Deaf Lives SeriesRobert F. Panara lost his hearing from spinal meningitis in 1931 at the age of ten. However, he could read and write, and with his friends help, Bob (as he was known), made it through high school. His new solitude created a new passion reading, reading, and reading. The stage was set for the emergence of one of the great deaf educators in modern time, a life fully captured in Harry G. Langs Teaching from the Heart and Soul: The Robert F. Panara Story.Bob Panaras many achievements began after his discovery of Gallaudet College in the 1940s. There, he wrote The Significance of the Reading Problem, which first expressed his belief that teaching comes from the heart and soul. The article secured him his first job at the New York School for the Deaf in White Plains. Bob returned to teach at Gallaudet College from 1948 until 1965, when he left to help found the National Technical Institute for the Deaf (NTID) and the National Theatre of the Deaf (NTD) all in the same year. He continued to expand arts and literature at NTID until his retirement in 1987.Bob Panaras genius resides in the people he inspired with his vivacious teaching style. He believed ardently in involving students, that they should be the book. Former students tell story after story about his fabulous interpretations of drama and poetry, a legacy confirmed by his own story in Teaching from the Heart and Soul.
