Jesse Lee Peterson : The Antidote: Healing America From the Poison of Hate, Blame and Victimhood before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised The Antidote: Healing America From the Poison of Hate, Blame and Victimhood:

history he covers in "the Antidote": changes in relationship between races, changes in family and personal values; and changes in some of the geographies Rev. Peterson mentions, greater NY/NJ/Philadelphia and LA/South Central and Compton most specifically. We both went through the terrible 60s and 70s and know the fall-out from that seismic shift. I also have read about many of the public and private people he discusses. And finally, I "met" Rev. Peterson on Tucker Carlson and knew I'd relate to his no-nonsense approach. What I didn't expect to find was such a very readable and useful book. It embraces and emphasizes much of my other learning. And Rev. Peterson never lets go of the importance of remembering we are all God's people and bound by his laws first; it is only that that sets us free.. This is one book I am NOT going to pass along although I will heartily recommend it to others. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Five Stars By Prince Sublime Good read, helped understand a lot of today's social ills. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Five Stars By Robert Goodell Stunning review of what's happening in America re: Black American problems and the media reporting!

For a half century or more, black people have labored under the spell of what Jesse Lee Peterson calls the alchemists. These are the race hustlers, media hacks, politicians, community organizers and the like who promise to fundamentally transform America. The transformation they promise, however, produces only fools gold unearned benefits like welfare, food stamps, subsidized housing, payouts from lawsuits, and maybe one day even reparations. Worse, to secure these counterfeit goods, recipients have to sacrifice something of infinite value: the sanctity of the two-parent family. It is a devil's bargain. To make this experiment work, the alchemists have created an ungodly and unhealthy environment, one in which the white population is made to feel guilty and the black population made to feel angry. The pattern in this is simple: children black or white when deprived of fathers, grow up angry at their parents. White children displace their anger in a thousand different directions. Black children channel theirs, for the most part, in a single destructive direction towards and against white people. The alchemists encourage them to do this, enable them, and even reward them. This anger fuels the system and pays the alchemists bills. As bleak as this all sounds, an antidote exists, which saved Peterson's life, that of his son, and those of countless young men who have been counseled at Peterson's organization, BOND. The perverse genius of liberalism has been its ability to capture black anger and project it outwards towards anyone, black or white, who resists the Democratic agenda. By encouraging a resentful dependency, liberals have instituted a new kind of slavery in the black community as emotionally shackling as the physical slavery that first brought Africans to America. Peterson knows this story from the inside as few other people do. Born on an Alabama plantation, he was abandoned by his father before he was born. After high school, Peterson moved to Los Angeles and for the next twenty years moved purposelessly through life, channeling his internal anger outwards towards white people and America in general. In the mission he has undertaken since, and in this hopeful book, Peterson shares what he learned on his personal road to Damascus.

About the Author Jesse Lee Peterson is the most courageous, outspoken critic of the civil rights establishment in America today. Raised without his father on a plantation near Tuskegee, Alabama during the Jim Crow era, Peterson has lived a part of America's history few have experienced. After a spiritual transformation, Peterson founded BOND, a nationally recognized nonprofit organization dedicated to Rebuilding the Family by Rebuilding the Man. Peterson is also the founder of The BOND Leadership Academy, a private school in Los Angeles. He's a radio talk show host, speaker, and the author of SCAM: How the Black Leadership Exploits Black America, and From Rage to Responsibility. Peterson writes a weekly column for WND.com and appears as a media commentator on Fox News Channel, CNN, and other national TV and radio networks.
