Because the chapters are by different authors from various backgrounds, having them all compiled into an orderly book adds more value to it. It is up to the reader to formulate their final opinion on what work is to them, derived from Karl Marx, Rudyard Kipling, Aristotle, Nathaniel

Hawthorne, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, John Calvin, Karl Barth, William Shakespeare, Mark Twain, and Abraham Joshua Heschel. If that's not a diversity of opinions of life, I'm not sure what would be. 7 of 7 people found the following review helpful. A Classic Approach To Work By Keith Johnson This book is a refreshing review of why we work and how we should enjoy the work we do everyday. Rooted in many of the philosophers from the past to the current, this book points you to search your soul on whether you are working to satisfy an income requirement or because you are working for enjoying while getting paid at the same time. Truly this book intends to encourage you to enjoy your work and if you do not enjoy your work FIND one you do enjoy.

This text proposes different ways of thinking about work. It explores many of the ways in which human beings have thought about the place of work in life - its meanings, its limits, and its relation to other obligations, to the life cycle, to play and to rest.

" a tool-chest for anyone who wishes to think through the relation between God's calling and our daily tasks." --
Vocation, 2004
